

The San Francisco Treat

Since 2003

March 8, 2003

All the News That's Fit to Make Up

Controversy Erupts Over Treasure Hunt

A game called "BATH" takes place today amidst raging controversy. Game Control says BATH is an acronym for Bay Area Treasure Hunt. Others claim a more sinister meaning, leaving this tantalizing mystery unsolved. Detractors point to the hedonism and debauchery exhibited in past events of this sort (see column three, top). Petitioned to block the event, Mayor Willie Brown demurred, saying 'You can't police every private activity. If we tried, government would grind to a halt and City officials would be unable to concentrate on more important issues, such as Fajita-Gate, overtime pay for limo drivers, and the number of spe... (continued on page 12)

Gamers Terrify Residents

Organizers of 'BATH' game wanted for questioning

Police are searching for a huge, yeti-sized, delusional man last seen wearing a headlamp and muttering 'google google google,'

(continued in mid-third column)

Team Tupac: Movers and Shakurs Remake Classic

A team of independent filmmakers involved in BATH and calling themselves Tupac have completed work on a new movie. The twenty-something entrepreneurs say their film is based on the same classic book as the holiday film "Miracle on Thirty Fourth Street," and remains true to the spirit of that enduring holiday classic. The new version is the story of a donut shop Santa named Krispy Kreme, found living in a cardboard box on the Stanford campus. Producers Raj Gajwani, Kausik Rajgopal, Sharyn Efimoff, Jeremy Henrickson, Kimberly Wicoff, and Jason O'Broin expect a Christmas 2003 release.

Startup Aims to Reinvent Toilet Technology

Proclaiming they've had a enough of stinky bowls, Charlie and Justin Graham have launched a new startup, Tweedles 'R Us, said to be flush with venture capital funds, that will revolutionize how we... (continued on page 4)

Shocking Scandal – Fact or Fiction?

What happened? That is the question facing the Bay Area today as shocking new details emerge about the team "Where's The B?," who were seen late one January night on the Stanford campus wading nude into a pool full of rubber duckies. It appears that in the wake of their unexpected and possibly corrupt second-place finish at BANG2, the team has ... (continued on page 6) who claims to be very rich, bragging about owning large chunks of real estate in Mountain View. Sources say he is the leader of an independent gang that goes by the name "Blood & Bones." Despite its name, this gang's colors are blue, and it is not affiliated with the L.A.-based gangs, the Bloods and the Crips.

(continued from bottom of col 1)

unidentified gang members

Acting Police Chief John Y. Loo advises citizens to avoid going out in public until this gang is (continued on page 4)